SUPP. TO
REPORT NO.General Description of Area South of Stargard

1. "The following information dates up to February 1954:
2. "The area south of Stargard, part of which belongs to the Stargard district and part of which belongs to the Pyrzycy and Mysliborz districts, is typical farming terrain. Nearly 80% of the farms have already been nationalized, along PGR or kolkhoz lines. According to information I have received, quite a good deal of progress in farm mechanization has been made.

Industrial Developments

3. "Following are two of the larger investments which have been made within the area:
  - (a) A second track of rails which was laid after 1952 on the Stargard-Krzyz (German: Kreuz) railway line along the former German-Polish frontier.
  - (b) The new road, finished in 1953, connecting Glarow (German: Glasow) with Trzcianna (German: Schoenberg). This is a shortcut connecting the Pyrzycy-Mysliborz highway with a first-grade highway which passes through Trzcianna towards Gorzow (German: Landsberg/Warthe). The Pyrzycy-Mysliborz highway segment was completely reconstructed in 1952-53.
4. "No special industrial investments other than the above have been made in the area except for the reconstruction of some plants destroyed during World War II. Also, in many areas, dwelling-places have been rebuilt. Not all the high-tension lines are back in operation. For example, the high-tension line running south from Pyrzycy has not yet been reconstructed.

Military Importance

5. "There is an airfield south of Stergard between Kluczewo (German: Kletzow), Słotnica (German: Schlottnitz) [not in NIS Gazetteer for Poland] and Burzykow (German: Buslar) [not in NIS Gazetteer] which is now under further expansion. a Soviet unit operating jet-propelled
- 25X1 planes is at this airfield.
6. "The second airfield is south of Pyrzyc, directly south of the small locality of Sycino (German: Augustenhof) [not in NIS Gazetteer]. Until 1952, this airfield was open as pasture land. In 1952, it was taken over by military authorities as an auxiliary landing field for the Kluczewo airport. The runways have been cleared off and the three buildings situated on the northern end of the airfield area have been reconstructed.

Pyrzyce

9. "Pyrzyce, a district town, was one of the most damaged towns in Poland. The damage to the town itself was as high as 80%. Most of the damage was in the old part of the city. Because of the resulting housing shortage, until 1951 the district management offices were located in nearby Lipiany. Part of the town next to the railway station has been rebuilt and 2500 to 3000 inhabitants are now there.

Lipiany

11. The small town of Lipiany, located between Andz Lake (German: Wendelsee) [not in NIS Gazetteer] and Moscielne Lake (German: also Wendelsee) gradually grew up to its present role as a district town. It became a district town after World War II because of the destruction of the old district town of Frysze. Lipiany has approximately 5000 inhabitants. Only a few buildings were destroyed during the war, as, for example, the railway station.
